The American Academy of Pain Medicine
Position Statement for Scope of Practice in Pain Medicine

Whereas, The American Academy of Pain Medicine is dedicated to the safe and appropriate care of the patient suffering from pain through the practice of Pain Medicine.

Whereas, The American Academy of Pain Medicine (AAPM) believes that a Pain Medicine practitioner is a physician who, by academic medical degree and clinical postgraduate training, board certification, continuing medical education in Pain Medicine and a license to practice medicine, is uniquely qualified to provide a comprehensive array of professional services related to the medical specialty of Pain Medicine. The practice of this specialty involves the identification, diagnosis and treatment of persons with chronic pain symptoms, and often complex, chronic pain conditions to which many diseases may contribute.

Whereas, The medical specialty of Pain Medicine is currently recognized by the American Board of Pain Medicine and by the American Board of Medical Specialties as a subspecialty of anesthesiology, physical medicine and rehabilitation, neurology, and psychiatry.

Whereas, The American Academy of Pain Medicine believes that the physician is called upon to make continuing adjustments based on medical judgments drawn from patient response to treatment. With regard to interventional therapies (e.g., injections, surgical procedures), it is not the procedures itself, but the purpose and manner in which such procedure is utilized, that demands the ongoing application of direct and immediate medical judgment, which constitutes the practice of medicine. A non-physician may have education, training and, indeed, expertise in such area but expertise cannot, in and of itself, supply authority under law to practice medicine.

Whereas, The American Academy of Pain Medicine believes that hospital credentialing committees must have policies in place that restrict credentialing of non-physician clinicians for positions that are not within their respective scope of practice.

Whereas, The American Academy of Pain Medicine encourages and supports state medical boards and state medical societies in adopting advisory opinions and advancing legislation, respectively, that the practice of Pain Medicine constitutes the practice of medicine.
RESOLVED, The practice of Pain Medicine is the practice of medicine by a physician. Anyone who practices Pain Medicine and is not a physician is out of their scope of practice and should be held accountable for adverse outcomes. Patients expect and deserve the best in medical care, and when their care entails the practice of Pain Medicine, that care should only be offered by licensed and properly trained physicians to ensure the health and safety of all patients.

AAPM, founded in 1983, is the recognized authority on the evaluation and care of patients with pain. It is a professional community of physicians with a sustained interest in pain disorders and their management, with a background in related specialties such as anesthesiology, internal medicine, neurology, neurosurgery, orthopedic surgery, physiatry, family practice, and psychiatry.
